Acoustic guitars are made from living material so they need proper care and feeding. Playing the guitar should be a rewarding experience, but it can frustrate the novice as well as the professional if the instrument is not set up properly. Improper setup can result in simple problems such as struggling to press down the strings or difficulty in tuning; or in worse cases, cracks in the wood or pieces like the bridge coming off the guitar. Norman Haight has been building acoustic guitars since 1989. He has been teaching guitar building classes since 2008. He brings his considerable knowledge and teaching skills to you in his new seminar series, beginning with the basics of guitar maintenance. Putting this information in book form and providing lots of great photographs, provides the guitar player with something to look at while actually working on his/her guitar.
