A Brief Exerpt:

"The big bike idled into Mariana making the throaty noise Harley's are famous for. "Why don't you pull over there buddy!" he heard from the P.A. system on a Deputy Sheriff's car. Bird pulled off to the side of Lafayette Street and parked the bike. The Deputy walked up to him and grabbed him, giving him a bear hug. "They said you were dead," Brad Chambers said with a grin.

"The rumors of my demise have been greatly exaggerated," Bird said, quoting Mark Twain, "How have you been Brad?"

"Almost ready to retire now, three more years," Brad said. "Nothing much changes around here, you know how it is. You're going to be about the biggest news around here this week. Been to see Angie yet?"

"Nope," Bird said, "that's where I was headed when you stopped me." He looked up and saw an elderly woman approaching him, waving her cane furiously. "Hello Mrs Wells," he said as he opened his arms to hug her.

"We heard you were dead!" she snarled, just before she threw herself into his arms. Mrs. Wells had been his teacher in third grade, and his Sunday School teacher as long as Bird's mother was alive. Pop hadn't been so demanding about the boy attending church. Mrs. Wells let him go. "Well boy," she said, "what are you going to do about it?"
