George Grant, one of the most original thinkers of Canada, was a great nationalist ever born in Canada. He was by profession a philosopher and a political scientist and taught both these subjects in the University of Me Master and the University of Dalhousie. In his major work "Lament for a Nation" which made him famous as an original philosopher he expressed his concern about the dangers of technology and modernism rather more intensely in another book "Technology and Empire", which also established him as a great patriot, a political leader and an idealist philosopher of Canada. Grant's writings still actively influence many Canadian politicians, political scientists, philosophers, religious preachers and scholars.
