Mistress Anne Temple Bailey

"[...] Toby, given a box to himself, turned his melting eyes upon his master and whined. "He was sent to me just before I left New York," Richard explained. "I fancy he is rather homesick. I am the only thing in sight that he knows." "You might take him into the house," Anne said doubtfully, "only it is a rule that if there are many dogs they all have to share alike and stay out here. When there are only two or three they go into the sitting-room with the men." "He can lie down behind the stove in the kitchen," Peggy offered hospitably. "Mamie does." [...]"
