Kohuneje: Sketches Of An Encounter With Dogman Anthony J. Chaney

Real werewolves running around the countryside? No....they are dogmen! Mistakenly referred to as being werewolves and even potentially being identified as a type of Bigfoot, Anthony shares with us his encounter with a dogman while returning home from work in the middle of February in 2011. Dogmen! What are they? Werewolves or a new type of bigfoot? Maybe something yet to be determined! FOREWORD It has been said that a law enforcement officers daily existence while on the job is 95% boredom punctuated with 5% sheer terror. After policing a contract nightclub fraught with danger, Security Officer Anthony Chaney believed that with his shift over he could now relax and enjoy an early morning drive home. But as fate would have it, and as the universe would dictate, the pits of hell seemingly opened for a brief period of time, spewing out a creature that one would only assume they would find while experiencing the worse of nightmares. To Officer Chaney's amazement, and while on a lonely road, inter-spaced with homes and their sleeping occupants, an interloper breached the dimensions of time and space and confronted Chaney face to face. During that brief moment, Anthony Chaney experienced a creature who would make the idea, and belief of Bigfoot shrink to insignificance. For lack of better term, what Officer Chaney experienced that early morning has come to be known as Dogman. Although not as well known as Bigfoot, Dogman has always had a place with Native Americans through their verbal traditions of history and cave paintings. What you are about to read is an interesting and very sobering account of a rare Cryptid that only a very few are "lucky" enough to have witnessed, and lived to tell about. Daniel Baker Sierra Bigfoot Search COVER REVIEW "Outstanding!" Daniel Baker, Sierra Bigfoot Search "Almost everyone you know has heard of Bigfoot. Few people know, there's a scarier, more aggressive kind of cryptid roaming the wild places of our world." Dogmen! Vic Cundiff Host, Dogman Encounters
