Intelligence, Espionage and Related Topics (Bibliographies and Indexes in Military Studies) James D. Calder

Calder provides an annotated bibliography of more than 10,000 citations on intelligence, intelligence services, espionage, and related national or domestic security issues published in serial journal article form, mainly in English language sources, from 1844 onward. Many citations to journals in other languages are also cited. The majority of citations are annotated, but non-annotated titles contain information sufficiently clear to indicate the nature of the contents. Citations are arranged alphabetically by author, and all co-authors are indexed.

An introductory essay evaluates issues relevant to the exponential growth of scholarly journal literature on the topic, particularly in the last two decades. Brief recommendations are included in the preface on how the bibliography can most effectively be used. Following the annotated bibliography, Calder provides a detailed key word or term index as well as citations to all journals and magazines used. This is an indispensable research tool for scholars, students, and others involved with military and intelligence issues throughout the world.
